Borut Pahor

President of the Republic of Slovenia

Dear Internautica, distinguished organisers and exhibitors, dear visitors and all admirers of the sea.

I am deeply honoured to once again welcome you as the patron of the Nautical Exhibition, which attracts visitors from near and far.

This year, I was once again delighted to accept this honourable association with the most important Adriatic nautical exhibition, because it is an event that presents innovations and achievements from the world nautical industry, as well as the most distinguished names from the maritime world. It also enthuses admirers of the sea by featuring some unique aspects of this sector – for example, this year, the areas of so-called green mobility and green technologies are especially emphasised.

I am convinced that events such as the Adriatic queen of the nautical industry, Internautica, represent a step forward for the Slovenian economy, tourism and entrepreneurship. They represent an incentive to pursue the new ideas of our top innovators in the maritime industry, who are an inspiration to search for solutions that want to give back more and take less from the sea, the Earth and the environment. It has thus become increasingly evident that Internautica is an irreplaceable opportunity for Slovenian tourism – it is searching for new paths and methods to connect man and nature, and Portorož is simply the best venue for such an event.

Room with a view to a different world

Time just flew by

Time just flew by from that 29th May 1996 when Zoran Thaler, the acting Slovenian secretary of State, opened the first Internautica show together with Neptune and uttered the soothing song to the landlocked Slovenian soul: "Portorož could become one of the most important nautical shows in Europe." They bravely showed 100 boats, hosting 58 exhibitors from 8 countries. Meanwhile, Gaia Legend, the most successful Slovenian sailboat at the time, sailed from the Portorož marina to the great Rimini – Corfu – Rimini regatta.

And after that? Slovenians have been winning the Barcolani regatta in Trieste all these years. Vasilij Žbogar won two Olympic medals. Marin Medak rowed across the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea. Jure Šterk sailed around the world in a small sailboat, never to return from one of his outings. The Slovenian navy acquired the Ankaran patrol boat in 1996 and the Triglav patrol ship 15 years later. The catch of the Slovenian fisherman has been declining ever since. Slovenia sold their Splošna plovba Portorož shipping company. The amount cargo going through Luka Koper has quadrupled. Slovenians have doubled the number of boats in Koper's register. Slovenian sports boat engineers are one of the best in the world (according to the number of vessels made following their plans). At least every twentieth Slovenian has a boatmaster's license. Slovenians have a lot more to do with the sea than we are prepared to admit. Jurij Korenc was the president of the International Federation of Boat Show Organisers for a while (he is the vice-president at the moment). Internautica has remained the largest nautical show in the Adriatic. It has weathered the storm.

The financial crisis managed to bring down Seaway, one of the best Slovenian companies, which made one of the first solar powered vessels. But in all these years, more than 50,000 sailboats and yachts have been made following the designs of Japex and Jernej Jakopin and their co-workers. They can be considered authors of the biggest yacht fleet in the world, worth over 3 billion euros. An astonishing 92 of their boats have been awarded boat of the year awards in different shows.

More than 70,000 Slovenians acquired their boatmaster's license in this time and they have gone on to experience all sorts of seafaring adventures, including shipwrecks. And yet Internautica is not only a show for the chosen who get to ride on yachts worth millions of euros. It is also a show for tens of thousands of others who like to surf, kite, dive, for all those who love to row or row standing up on their SUPs or race with their jet skis. It is a show for everyone who loves sailing fashion, a show for everyone who is in awe of the new design and architectural creations which predict the coming lifestyle trends. In spite of the global financial crises or maybe because of it, the nautical industry has led to of the most incredible creations of the human spirit. It improves our manufacturing abilities and creates new materials which can withstand the effects of salt, water, the sun and even the strongest winds while harnessing renewable energy sources as much as possible. Seafarers are not afraid of the rising sea levels.

The sea has always offered minerals and a great basis for human development. It has always been the place where most of the world could be reached. Space is too far away, but the sea is right here. Internautica is only one of the rooms with a view to a different world. It offers us a moment to forget our differences, uncover the blinds and observe the bright skies. The horizon is infinite, the wind is blowing in the sails and the bow is leaving its footprint in the water as a southern island is approaching. The sea is not a luxury but an opportunity. It is a choice. Everything else is moot.

23rd INTERNAUTICA will be focusing again on the presentation of innovative future technologies increasing individual's ecological awareness promoting the use of energy from renewable sources, or hybrid systems with reduced fuel consumption and emissions. The Green Avenue project 2018 is presenting new electric and hybrid vehicles, and of course vessels and nautical equipment of this type.

In 2014 various electric and hybrid vehicles have been exhibited: Pipistrel NASA-award winning aircraft, various hybrid and electric cars (BMW i3, Tesla, Opel Ampera, E-Smart Roadster, E-Smart, Nissan Leaf), ecological vehicles (Fiat, gas engine modification), and an electric motor and bicycle. In the water it was possible to visit the hybrid vessels Greenline, as well as some purely electric-driven vessels.

In 2017 the Green Avenue has increased and presented more exhibited cars, motorcycles, bicycles and other means of transport used to drive electrical or hybrid vehicles. At the same time Green Avenue 2018 will expand the program to other products and services that are not directly related to transport. Everything ecologically oriented, that is technologically sophisticated and environmentally friendly will be shown in the area of Green Avenue. Products, supporting each other are increasing the level of all the displayed programs.

The period ahead will be marked by the prudent and efficient use of energy, shift to green energy and the development of related green technologies. In the field of green mobility, Slovenia has achieved many outstanding results - on the road, in the air and on the water. A platform and many opportunities for successful Slovenian economic future and identity has been created in last few years.
